FINANCIAL PLANNING FOR THE PERSON WHO HAS EVERYTHING

Some people seemingly have all the possessions in the world and lack concerns when it comes to money. So they don't need financial planning, right? Not so fast says the BAM ALLIANCE's Tim Maurer, who puts that question to a test with a simple exercise -- one that has value whether you have everything or not. This article examines the decisions we make about how we're investing and spending and whether your resources are aligned with what matters most to you. Maurer writes, "Even the person who has everything has much to gain from examining their deepest-held motivations and the degree to which their acting in accordance with them -- also known as financial and life planning."
